AXA AND SUEZ PARTNER TO IMPROVE RESILIENCE FOR CITIES, TERRITORIES AND INDUSTRIES AGAINST FLOOD RISKS

AXA and SUEZ agreed on a partnership to improve resilience of cities and territories against flood risks. By joining their competencies, the two groups will propose solutions to communities and industries to help them improve resilience<sup>1</sup>, a factor of performance and attractiveness.

Through a global service offer, AXA and SUEZ will provide communities and industries with:

- analysis of vulnerability to any form of flooding (flash flood, marine submersion, rising groundwater level, rupture of hydraulic structures, overflowing),
- solutions to reduce vulnerability for locations and territories through business continuity plans, education and prevention,
- tools for awareness and assistance in crisis management (alert tools, material and human means, etc.).

This service offer combines the complementary know-how of AXA - a market leader in Risk management and insurance solutions for cap corporate companies - and of SUEZ, a leader in resources management and a reference in forecast, prevention, protection and help in decision-making regarding natural risks and climate change.

"Facing climate change, the resilience of territories and industries, in particular the protection against flood risks, is a major stake for public and private economic players.

<sup>1</sup> In Europe only and from 2002 to 2013, the cost for flooding for the member states is estimated to more than Euro 150 billion, according to « Study on Economic and Social Benefits of Environmental Protection and Resource Efficiency Related to the European Semester » published by the European Commission in February 2014.

This new service offer developed with AXA is completely in line with our strategy which aims at accompanying businesses and communities in their prevention of catastrophes linked to extreme weather events", stated Annelise AVRIL, CEO of SUEZ consulting activities.

Rob BROWN, CEO of AXA Corporate Solutions, comments: "We are very pleased to enter into this innovative partnership with SUEZ, who are renowned for their worldwide expertise in resources management. This strategic cooperation will allow us to unite our competencies and offer our clients an extensive range of services with regards to resilience against flood risks. It will ensure we continue to respond to our clients' emerging needs and to accompany them in any new challenges."
